

My soul is the part of me I least understand. Somewhat an illusive commodity... but I know this of my soul... "It believes". It believes in me, in you, in us, in the bond that we have embraced, and will continue throughout this life and whatever lies beyond.

My soul longs for something greater, is patient, is kind, not envy, not boastful, not proud, not rude, not self-seeking, not easily angered, keeps no record of wrongs, does not delight in evil, rejoices with the truth, always protects, always trusts, always hopes, always perseveres, never fails, and endures forever everlasting.

I'll forever love you... and this I vow to the end of time. All my love, for all your life.

Men Need Friendship – Male Bonding

Friendship is important for men and women. In men, a strange dichotomy exist, however, that can be the source of eternal vexation when women try to figure them out. Men have a strong need to have male friends. They want at least one "good buddy" who relates to them even when they are happily married. The trouble is that, though a few good men have the ability to develop and cultivate deep, meaningful male relationships, most men don't know how. So, they compensate by evolving relationships around work, sports and the age old game of outdoing each other and bragging at every turn. And, depending on a man's relationship with his father in the formative years growing up, many men may never be able to move beyond this shallow form of "male bonding".

One of the biggest factors in a man finding one or more good friends is trust. Many men find it hard to trust one another. Their lives center around competition and, whether they are at work or at play, there seems to be an underlying spirit of "don't trust anyone; instead, outdo them. You'll find security in being on top". Perhaps this stems from our hunter/gather times where the office competition took men out in the field to hunt food. There, every man was your enemy. If you got the game that I was after, me and the family I was providing for might go hungry, or die. The stakes were pretty high. And, it seems that we haven't lived down that possibly innate need to beat our neighbors. This is one of the factors at the heart of male distrust.

Personal security also plays a role. Many men, because of their spirit of distrust, possess little Courtship is the process of selecting and attracting a mate.

It is governed by a complex set of unwritten rules that are loosely defined as etiquette. Such rules dictate where, when, with whom and in what manner we all attract the opposite sex. We generally obey these unofficial rules by instinct but we also only become aware of the rules when someone commits a breach of them.

Online Advertising for Dating Services

Companies offering dating services are investing increasing amounts in advertising, according to a new study, with online advertising seeing particular growth.

Research carried out by Nielsen Monitor-Plus found that such firms in the US, in particular online dating sites, spent $127.3 million advertising online in 2006. This is up from $88.9 million spent the previous year and the second highest area of investment for dating services. Of the 12 dating services firms advertising online, seven companies were "almost exclusively using the internet for advertising", the report found.

The top ten dating services firms accounted for 96 per cent of the total advertising spend for the industry, some $290 million of $302 million.

It only makes sense to advertise your Dating Site online and it's even more important if your site is new in the industry.

personal security. Worse, many are also uncomfortable with their sexuality and so their sexual security is very low. If a man's wife asks her to carry her purse for a moment while walking in a busy mall, a lot of men would actually say no. Or, they may tell her to set it on a bench and they will "sit" with it. Some might even hide it under a jacket or other item. Another manifestation of this lack of male security is very applicable to the male want for friendship. Men desire close, deep friendships but are insecure about expressing the emotions that accompany those types of relationships. You frequently see women hugging each other, dancing together in public or even touching each other's hands in public. They will even tell each other how they feel. Most men struggle with this a great deal.

Men harbor many homophobic feelings that make them think that if they show any sort of emotion towards another man, others will think they are gay. Worse, they may feel gay themselves for engaging in a hug or an emotional gesture towards a man. These are really just psychological fears that are unfounded but such a part of our nature and nurture that they form very powerful and real fears in many men's minds. So powerful, in fact, that a man may verbally or physically attack a homosexual man in front of his peers to show how "unhomosexual" he is while inside wishing he could express himself with some of the sensitivities of the homosexual man.

Dating or courtship is the process of choosing and attracting a mate for companionship, sex, marriage and/or sexual reproduction. It is also the pre-arranged meeting (exclusive) of two people with mutual interest in one another to communicate with and to comprehend through shared participation in social activities. According to western tradition, a date is an occasion when one socializes with a potential lover or spouse for the purpose of being deeply acquainted with each other as also to come to an understanding whether they wish to have a purposeful relationship.

Though dating was generally sponsored through friends or relatives, the Second World War diminished such opportunities to a great extent, giving rise to commercial dating agencies. Newspapers and magazine ads contributed to the cause too. However, post-Internet days have brought a sea change in dating and mate-finding anonymously. Online dating services today provide unlimited dating extravaganza on the monitor without any commitment tagged to it. Ladies and men can now tap the online resources with the click of a mouse and carry on love duels without disclosing identity. Though this online intimacy can be instantly arousing, yet its pitfalls are of concern since none of the parties can ever guess an inch of the other's inner life or face read either of them. However, the world becoming more and more full of 'singles', online dating gives the opportunity to know more and more people and even find a life partner.

Men's lack of sexual security also causes their relationships with other men to center around verbal insults and other negative commentary as a way to say, "I care" without actually uttering the words or showing the genuine feelings. It is easier for them to maintain the hard, negative edge than to actually expose any kind of genuine compassion.

So, what is the answer? Men need to begin to get more in touch with their genuine emotions. They need to not be afraid to express their want for a male friend or their feelings towards that friend. Women can help in this endeavor by guiding their willing partners down a path of emotional exploration. This can have a powerful effect on not just the man's growth as a human being but on the quality of the relationship between the man and the woman.
