

My soul is the part of me I least understand. Somewhat an illusive commodity... but I know this of my soul... "It believes". It believes in me, in you, in us, in the bond that we have embraced, and will continue throughout this life and whatever lies beyond.

My soul longs for something greater, is patient, is kind, not envy, not boastful, not proud, not rude, not self-seeking, not easily angered, keeps no record of wrongs, does not delight in evil, rejoices with the truth, always protects, always trusts, always hopes, always perseveres, never fails, and endures forever everlasting.

I'll forever love you... and this I vow to the end of time. All my love, for all your life.

How to say no Graciously - "Reject"!

So, I've been communicating with this person, we'll call him Joe for about three weeks now. It all started with a wink from him, and moved to a couple phone calls. Quickly, I know – but with the wonders of the online dating resources like VoIP, it happens. Anyway, Joe and I seemed to click. Our conversations were fast and full of banter and we shared a few laughs. Despite having several photos of me on my profile, he wanted to see more – in fact somewhat demanded to meet in person for "coffee". When I told him I wasn't quite comfortable enough to meet in person, he basically dropped off the face of the earth. Sure, it's his loss, but it still bugs the hell out of me since there were other ways he could have handled the situation graciously.

For starters, he could have been upfront and said even though he had enjoyed emailing and having phone conversations, he didn't feel the chemistry was there to be anything more than friends. I understand that men are visual creatures. I get that. But guess what, women like visuals too. In fact, the first attraction in a relationship is visually based.

If he was afraid of hurting my feelings, he could have taken an easy way out and sent an email simply stating something like "Thanks for taking the time to chat and get to know me. I have decided to pursue another match and wish you well in your search." Maybe he was afraid by doing that I would open a series of emails, but really if he's not into me, he's not into me. Why would I want that?

Most of the online dating sites have a very easy way to say no to someone while saving face and avoiding Courtship is the process of selecting and attracting a mate.

It is governed by a complex set of unwritten rules that are loosely defined as etiquette. Such rules dictate where, when, with whom and in what manner we all attract the opposite sex. We generally obey these unofficial rules by instinct but we also only become aware of the rules when someone commits a breach of them.

Online Advertising for Dating Services

Companies offering dating services are investing increasing amounts in advertising, according to a new study, with online advertising seeing particular growth.

Research carried out by Nielsen Monitor-Plus found that such firms in the US, in particular online dating sites, spent $127.3 million advertising online in 2006. This is up from $88.9 million spent the previous year and the second highest area of investment for dating services. Of the 12 dating services firms advertising online, seven companies were "almost exclusively using the internet for advertising", the report found.

The top ten dating services firms accounted for 96 per cent of the total advertising spend for the industry, some $290 million of $302 million.

awkward situations. If you have the option to send them a prefab email stating you are no longer interested, use it. It is so much kinder than simply disappearing into the ether. And really, when you think about it, in the real world when you want to stop seeing someone, you can't simply disappear. You have to tell them. Why should the online environment be any different?

If you are having a difficult time saying no, you are probably making it more difficult for yourself than it actually is. If you aren't interested in someone, be upfront and gentle. Women tend to be hopeful, so make sure you are being concise. We don't want details, but we do want to know definitively. So don't say you'll call them back, if you really don't intend to even pick up the phone. Just say upfront you don't think it's a match. We'll all be so much happier in the end.

Dating or courtship is the process of choosing and attracting a mate for companionship, sex, marriage and/or sexual reproduction. It is also the pre-arranged meeting (exclusive) of two people with mutual interest in one another to communicate with and to comprehend through shared participation in social activities. According to western tradition, a date is an occasion when one socializes with a potential lover or spouse for the purpose of being deeply acquainted with each other as also to come to an understanding whether they wish to have a purposeful relationship.

Though dating was generally sponsored through friends or relatives, the Second World War diminished such opportunities to a great extent, giving rise to commercial dating agencies. Newspapers and magazine ads contributed to the cause too. However, post-Internet days have brought a sea change in dating and mate-finding anonymously. Online dating services today provide unlimited dating extravaganza on the monitor without any commitment tagged to it. Ladies and men can now tap the online resources with the click of a mouse and carry on love duels without disclosing identity. Though this online intimacy can be instantly arousing, yet its pitfalls are of concern since none of the parties can ever guess an inch of the other's inner life or face read either of them. However, the world becoming more and more full of 'singles', online dating gives the opportunity to know more and more people and even find a life partner.
